PREFACE.

The period included within the third volume of the AMERICAN BIBLIOGRAPHY finds the art of printing, after one hundred and twenty-five years from its introduction, in 1639, finally established in all of the thirteen original States of the American Union; and it may be of interest to briefly summarize by whom the first presses were founded, and the times and places where the introduction of printing occurred in the several American Colonies. In chronological order this record is as follows: First, Massachusetts, at Cambridge, by Stephen Daye, in 1639. Second, Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, by William Bradford, in 1685. Third, New York, at New York City, by William Bradford, in 1693. Fourth, Connecticut, at New London, by Thomas Short, in 1709. Fifth, Maryland, at Annapolis, by William Parks, in 1726. Sixth, Rhode Island, at Newport, by James Franklin, in 1727. Seventh, Virginia, at Williamsburgh, by William Parks, in 1730. Eighth, South Carolina, at Charleston, by Eleazer Phillips, junior, in 1732. Ninth, North Carolina, at Newbern, by James Davis, in 1751. Tenth, New Jersey, at Woodbridge, by James Parker, in 1755. Eleventh, New Hampshire, at Portsmouth, by Daniel Fowle, in 1756. Twelfth, Delaware, at Wilmington, by James Adams, in 1761. Thirteenth, Georgia, at Savannah, by James Johnston, in 1762. How closely connected in interests the communities in each Province were may be inferred from the fact that during the century and a quarter the printing-press had been established in only twenty-three centres, of which Pennsylvania had six; Connecticut three; Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and North Carolina, two each; and the remaining Provinces only the centre where printing was begun. How populous these communities were may be estimated from the statement of Ezra Stiles, in his sermon on Christian union, in 1760, that: "Four thousand British planters settled New-England, and in one hundred and twenty years their posterity are increased to five hundred thousand souls."

The introduction of printing during the eighteenth century was usually begun, or followed soon after, by the publication of a newspaper. Up to the close of the present volume about sixty newspapers had been established and continued for varying periods of publication. Of this number, four were established in Connecticut; one in Delaware; one in Georgia; two in Maryland; eleven in Massachusetts; one in New Hampshire; thirteen in New York; three in North Carolina; fifteen in Pennsylvania; three in Rhode Island; four in South Carolina; and one in Virginia. Of all the Colonies, New Jersey alone was without a newspaper, and, it may be added, without a common centre for one, for Woodbridge, where James Parker had established his press, was chosen as his birthplace, and not for its availability as a centre for publication. A phase of their publication, worthy of more extended notice, is the adaptability shown by the mothers and wives in assuming the duties of editorship of these journals when death or disaster overcame their husbands or sons. Such women as Cornelia Bradford at Philadelphia; Catherine Zenger at New York; Margaret Draper at Boston; Anne Franklin, and Ann Barber at Newport; Sarah Goddard at Providence; Mistress Watson at Hartford; Anne Catharine Green at Annapolis; and Elizabeth, and Anne Timothy at Charleston, illustrate the high type of Colonial womanhood and the mutual interdependence of the family relations in pioneer times. While the trial of John Peter Zenger in New York, in 1735, had established the principle of the freedom of the press in that Colony, the experiences of the Reverend Dr. William Smith in Pennsylvania, in 1758; of Daniel Fowle in Massachusetts, in 1754; and John Wilkes in London, in 1763, shows that the principle was not yet of universal application.

Up to this time the different governments in the Colonies may be said to have been constituted and governed upon foundations which rested upon the teachings of religion, severe but salutary, and the progress of the people was, on the whole, peaceful and progressive; but the literary record shows a gradual weakening of this wholesome restraint, and a disposition to substitute for the law of God, the law of man. The growing preponderance of the work of legislative bodies shows that the representatives of the people had begun with that cheerful alacrity which animates the makers of laws which are presumed to be binding on everyone, but the makers, to manufacture that conflicting body of laws which is at once the pride and vexation, the amusement and despair of a law-abiding, law-ridden people, inextricably bound with chains of their own forging, and with no Lycurgus in sight to codify and release them from their inconsistencies. The natural result of living under laws which sounded as well as the laws of Moses followed in course. Wars followed naturally upon them. The people grew restive under them; and the native Indian was made to feel the full force of the civilizing influences which powerful nations are always ready to bestow upon the weak. There is abundance of evidence in this and the preceding volumes to show that up to the time of the death of George the second, in 1760, the Colonies were one in thought and feeling with the Mother Country. Her triumphs were hailed as the triumphs of her Colonies. Her griefs they regarded as their own. The declaration of war with France, in 1756, found ready response in the Colonies, who gave as a sacrifice thirty thousand of their men, and a half million pounds of treasure, to uphold the power of England in America. The Old French War, while it sapped their resources, also developed and showed them the powers latent in themselves. It shows a people thoroughly alive to the dangers of French and Indian aggression, and to the need of union of the Colonies to oppose them. During the struggle, the attitude of the ministry developed lots of the old Adam under the clerical garb, and, as in the later Revolutionary War, the soldiers did not want for scriptural authority, or personal example, to counsel, inspire, and encourage them to deeds of valor, as well as to welcome them back with thanksgiving at the successful conclusion of the war. That war, however, was hardly concluded before the first mutterings of the coming storm of revolution followed the publication of the two Acts of Parliament, one, for continuing and making perpetual an Act passed, in 1733, for "encouraging the trade of the Sugar Colonies in America," which imposed heavy duties on sugar and molasses imported into the Colonies; the other, the celebrated "Stamp Act," which went into force in the following year, 1765.

By Act of Parliament, in 1752, the old style of reckoning the year according to the Julian Calendar, ceased with the close of the second day of September, the succeeding eleven days being dropped, and the following day became the fourteenth of September, the month containing but nineteen days. The American Almanacs generally adopted the Gregorian Calendar in conformity with the Act. Perhaps it is well to state in this connection, that the general practice of this work has been to consider the Almanac of each year printed in the year previous to the one for which it is designed. For obvious reasons it is, and has been the custom in England for the publisher to have his Almanac for the new year ready for the trade on the twenty-first of November, and so generally has this been the custom that that day is known as "Almanack-day." In this country the practice has been more irregular, some issues appearing as early as October.

The literary record of the Colonies is, in the main, a record of the influences exerted by the Colleges upon the spiritual and literary life of the people. The history of Harvard College is coexistent with the history of printing, and presents an unbroken record of high literary achievement from its beginning in 1636. In 1755, the first of the annual Dudleian lectures at Harvard was delivered by President Holyoke. The Pietas et gratulatio, of 1761, is not only the handsomest specimen of the printer's art produced in the American Colonies, but, in a higher sense, it is an expression of the literary culture of the oldest educational institution in the Colonies. In itself it represents one of the mile-stones of progress. Judged by present day standards it is a remarkable volume, and our Universities may well ponder the question whether the scholarship they produce can equal, in classical learning, that produced in the first College a century and a half ago. The destruction of the College Library by fire, in January, 1764, was a public calamity which bibliographers and students may well deplore for the loss of the printed records of early American literature then destroyed. William and Mary College, next founded, in 1693, appears for the first time, through its Charter and Statutes, in the literary record of the year 1758. The literary current of Yale College has been strong and steady since its founders dedicated the College to literature by their first act in its founding, in 1700. In the present volume, Rector Thomas Clap, who, from his firm, unyielding qualities might well be styled the last of the Puritans, by his Religious constitutions of Colleges, published in 1754, aroused a controversy in which his conduct of the affairs of the College was strongly criticised, and as warmly defended. The College of New Jersey, now popularly known as Princeton University, chartered in 1746, first appears, with its earliest known Theses, and the Catalogue of the Library, in the record of the year 1760. The College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania, originally opened as an Academy and Charitable School in January, 1751, received its Additional Charter in the record of the year 1755. The College of New York, successively known as King's College, and Columbia College, appears first in this record, through its Charter, in 1754, and its Additional Charter, in the year 1755, although the denominational control of the new College had, previously, been the subject of a spirited controversy between adherents of the Church of England on the one side, and of the Reformed Dutch Church, and Presbyterian Church on the other, in which Francis Makemie's Narrative of his imprisonment for preaching one sermon, in 1707, was reprinted at the expense of the Presbyterians as part of their controversy with the Episcopalians. The Indian Charity School, founded at Lebanon, Connecticut, by the Reverend Eleazar Wheelock, through whom it is considered the beginning of Dartmouth College, is represented, in the record of the year 1763, by the first part of the Narrative of its founding. Rhode Island College, now Brown University, appears for the first time in the record of the year 1764, with the Act of establishment, prepared by the Reverend Dr. Ezra Stiles. In addition, the printed records show that an Academy was instituted at Charleston, South Carolina, in 1750; which was followed by the Philadelphia Academy, as noted above, in 1751; and by the Germantown Academy, in 1760.

Up to the close of the present volume, ten Libraries had issued Catalogues of their collections. In chronological order these were: Harvard College Library, in 1723 and 1725. Philadelphia Library Company, in 1733, 1735, 1741, 1746, 1757, and 1764. Yale College Library, in 1743 and 1755. Charleston Library Society, in 1750 and 1762. Philadelphia Union-Library-Company, in 1754. New York Society Library, in 1758. Burlington Library Company, in 1758. College of New Jersey Library, in 1760. Loganian Library, Philadelphia, in 1760, and Redwood Library, Newport, in 1764.

New England, in this period, was visited by the two evils most dreaded by its inhabitants. The earthquake of November, 1755, was the most serious ever known in that section, and while owing to the sparsely settled country no great material damage was done, the printed records show how generally the pulpit was inspired by its terrors to awaken the people to their spiritual needs. The other was a serious outbreak of smallpox in Boston, in the winter of 1751-1752. The medical history of New England has been largely a record of warning and instruction how to avoid this scourge which had decimated the native Indians before the arrival of the first settlers. So well known was the terror of the inhabitants of New England for this disease that, in 1777, the British Major Donkin made the vicious suggestion "such is their dread and fear of that disorder," that the most compulsive measure to disband the American rebels would be to "dip arrows in matter of small-pox, and twang" the inoculation into them. In March, 1760, the Town of Boston was also desolated by a fire which in the short space of seven hours consumed between three and four hundred houses. And this was followed, in January, 1764, by the disaster of the burning of Harvard Hall and the College Library at Cambridge.

In 1754, a Bill debated in the Massachusetts General Court, for laying an excise on wine and distilled spirituous liquors retailed and consumed within the Province, to raise money to prosecute the French War by means of a Provincial Stamp Act, led to spirited denunciations of the measure in a number of anonymous pamphlets which denounced the tax as a violation of the British Constitution. One of these tracts, entitled The Monster of monsters, was especially offensive to that legislative body, who condemned it to be burned by the hands of the common hangman, and Daniel Fowle, who was charged with printing it, was arraigned and imprisoned for the offence, which was really committed by his brother, Zechariah Fowle. His account of his trial and imprisonment, entitled A Total eclipse of liberty, printed in the following year, forms another and interesting chapter in the history of the liberty of the press in this country. His persecution finally drove him and his press to New Hampshire, in 1756, where he became the first printer in that Province. In the same year he began the publication of The New-Hampshire Gazette, now the oldest newspaper continuously published in the United States; and, in 1761, printed a collection of the Acts and laws of the Province.

In Massachusetts, William Douglass' Summary was concluded by his death in 1752. And in the same year Reverend John Barnard issued his New version of the Psalms. In 1753, Samuel Hopkins issued his Historical memoirs relating to the Housatunnuk Indians; and the controversy between the Plymouth Company and the Proprietors of the Township of Brunswick regarding title to lands on the Kennebeck River is a subject of public interest. In 1754 was published Jonathan Edwards' Enquiry into freedom of the will. In 1758, Thomas Prince edited a revised and improved edition of The New-England Psalm-book, with an interesting historical preface. In 1757, John Green and Joseph Russell began the publication of The Boston Weekly Advertiser, which was continued to the commencement of the Revolutionary War, and reprinted Governor William Shirley's Memoirs of the principal transactions of the last war, from the London edition. In 1760, they achieved the high-water mark of Colonial printing with the Pietas et gratulatio of Harvard College. In the same year Benjamin Mecom printed James Otis' Rudiments of Latin prosody. In 1763, Stephen Sewall issued his Hebrew grammar, designed to supersede, at Harvard College, the Grammar of Judah Monis, which had been in use there for nearly thirty years. In 1764, Lieutenant-Governor Thomas Hutchinson issued the first volume of his important History of the Colony of Massachusetts-Bay; William Wood's New-England prospect was first reprinted, and James Otis issued The Rights of the British Colonies asserted and proved.

In Rhode Island, James Franklin printed at Newport, in 1755, Stephen Hopkins' True representation of the plan formed at Albany for uniting all the Northern Colonies, which, however, failed to meet the approval of the Colonies at this time; and, in 1758, founded The Newport Mercury, which has been continuously published up to the present time; his successor, Samuel Hall, printing the Catalogue of the Redwood Library, in 1764. In 1762, William Goddard established the first press in the Providence Plantations, and in the same year founded The Providence Gazette.

In Connecticut, at New London, Timothy Green, junior, founded, in 1758, The New-London Summary, which was continued to his death in 1763. In that year Timothy Green, third printer of that name, founded the New-London Gazette, which was continued for more than eighty years. In 1754, James Parker established the first press in New-Haven, and in the following year founded the Connecticut Gazette, with John Holt as editor and partner, and continued its publication to the year 1764, when, after a short suspension, his successor as postmaster, Benjamin Mecom, revived it until his removal to Philadelphia in 1767. In 1758, James Parker and Company reprinted William Livingston's Review of the military operations in North-America, in vindication of Governor William Shirley's conduct in the French War. In 1759, a spirited controversy following the call and ordination of Reverend James Dana to the Church in Wallingford, issued from Parker's press at New-Haven. In 1764, Thomas Green established the first press in Hartford, and in the same year founded The Connecticut Courant, which has been continuously published to the present time.

In New York, in 1752, Henry De Foreest printed Roger Sherman's Caveat against injustice, of which only a single copy is known; and James Parker printed the Laws of New-York, digested by William Livingston and William Smith junior, the second volume of which was printed by William Weyman, in 1762; and began to print The Independent reflector, edited by William Livingston, which was continued into the following year. In the same year, Hugh Gaine established his press, and founded The New-York Mercury, which he continued for thirty-one years; printing also the first of the series of Hutchins Almanacs, which have been continued annually until the present century. In 1759, William Weyman, who had previously been associated with James Parker, founded The New-York Gazette, which he continued to the end of the year 1767. In 1761, Weyman printed the Evening service of Roshashanah and Kippur, the ritual of the Spanish and Portuguese Jews, and the first Jewish service-book printed in what is now the United States. In 1763, Benjamin Mecom began printing his short-lived New-York Pacquet. In the same year, John Holt printed the Laws, statutes, ordinances and constitutions of the City of New-York, in the mayoralty of John Cruger. And, in 1764, Hugh Gaine printed the Journal of the votes and proceedings of the General Assembly from 1691 to 1743, edited by Abraham Lott, junior.

In New Jersey, the still unsettled controversy with the Proprietors of the Eastern Division continued, Parker and Weyman printing for both sides of the controversy in New York, until James Parker established his press at Woodbridge, in 1755, when his office printed for the side of the settlers, and Weyman printed for the Proprietors. In 1760, Parker printed for the College of New Jersey, the second edition of Robert Ross' Introduction to Latin, which he had first printed in New York in 1752; and, in the same year, Catalogue of books in the library. Following these, in 1764, with An Account of the College of New-Jersey, which contained an engraving of Nassau-Hall. Leaming and Spicer's handsome edition of The Grants, concessions, and original constitutions of the Province of New-Jersey was printed, in 1758, by William Bradford, in Philadelphia, and is the largest work printed by him, and the best printed book issued from his press.

In Pennsylvania, Benjamin Franklin and Johann Böhm reprinted, in 1751, Johann Arndt's Des Hoherleuchteten Theologi, of nearly fourteen hundred pages, which was the largest book printed in Philadelphia in the eighteenth century. In 1752, Franklin and Hall printed Samuel Johnson's Elementa philosophica; and, in 1755, Geographical essays, by Lewis Evans, containing

A General Map of the Middle British Colonies, in America. The Poor Richard Almanack for 1758, in which the sayings of Poor Richard were gathered, is the last of the series edited by Benjamin Franklin, although it continued to be printed and published annually by the firm of Franklin and Hall. In 1757, Christoph Saur reprinted, in two volumes, John Everard's Some Gospel treasures, which in every way is superior to the three original editions printed in London in the seventeenth century. In 1760, Peter Miller and Company printed the second volume of A Collection of the laws of Pennsylvania, in continuation of John Kinsey's Collection, printed by Benjamin Franklin in 1742; and the Catalogus Bibliothecæ Loganianæ. In 1761, William Bradford printed the first edition of James Lyon's Urania, the largest music book of its kind up to this time. During this period there is evident efforts in the Colonies to cultivate a more systematic use of psalmody, and the use of instrumental music in worship. In 1762, Peter Miller and Company printed the important collection of The Charters and Acts of Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, edited by Lewis Weiss and Charles Brockden; and Henry Miller founded Der Wöchentliche Philadelphische Staatsbote, which was continued by him to 1779. In 1763 appeared the second edition of The Holy Bible, in German, printed by Christoph Saur, the younger, who proudly states in his preface: "So then the Holy Writ, called the Bible, appears on the American Continent for the second time in the German language to the renown of the German nation, no other nation being able to claim that the Bible has been printed in their language in this division of the globe." Saur also printed in this year Die Wandlende Seel, a German translation from the Dutch of J. P. Schabalie, a Mennonite minister, in which the participants in great Biblical events are made to tell their own stories. Noah's account of his narrow escape, of his botanical and zoological collections, and of the good conduct of the impriscned brutes is told in an entertaining and pleasant manner. This German translation has been frequently reprinted. And, in 1764, began the free publication of Ein Geistliches Magazien, with possibly one exception the first distinctively religious magazine published in the American Colonies, which he continued irregularly to 1770. In number 12, a poem by Alexander Mack is printed with the first German types cast in America, which were made in Germantown. The closing year of this volume was one of intense local excitements in Philadelphia, the principal one growing out of the still unsettled Indian problem. There was a small settlement of semi-christianized Indians, numbering about twenty, including women, children and old men, upon the Conestoga. They were said to have been peaceful; but some of the young men of Paxton Township in Dauphin County, and Donegal Township in Lancaster County, thinking otherwise, deliberately killed six of them at the settlement, in the winter of 1763-1764, and pursuing the rest to the Lancaster Workhouse, where they had fled for refuge, completed their work there, sparing neither women, children nor the aged. These were the so-called "Paxton Boys," and the fact that they were Irish Presbyterians was prominently brought forward in the controversy. Other Indians, under the teachings of the Moravians, were taken to Philadelphia for better protection and lodged in the Barracks. Learning of this the Paxton Boys, mounted and armed, set out for Philadelphia, and halted in Germantown. The excitement in Philadelphia was intense, and even the Quakers, to their honor, but to the after amusement at this violation of one of their well-known principles, armed themselves and joined the militia called out to resist the invaders. The difficulty was finally and peaceably settled by a conference of influential citizens with the leaders of the Paxton Boys. Following this excitement, arose the old quarrel between the Assembly and the Proprietaries, which culminated in the Assembly petitioning the King to abolish the proprietary system of government and to vest the appointment of Governors directly in the Crown. This was, also, the occasion for numerous speeches and tracts, the Germans generally siding with the Proprietaries in the controversy. And this was followed by the election for assemblymen in the fall of the year. Benjamin Franklin, who had been a member of the Assembly for fourteen years, and was a candidate for reelection had, in an unguarded moment, referred to the Germans as "boors." Notwithstanding the well-meant efforts of his friends to soften the blow by saying it was his American pronunciation of the word Bauer, meaning peasant, which deceived them, the German element determined to, and did accomplish his defeat. This was the occasion for a number of pamphlets; and his appointment as agent of the Assembly to plead before Parliament for the abolition of proprietary government met with further protest from them in the controversy which followed.

In Delaware the first printing-press was established, at Wilmington, by James Adams, in 1761, who founded, in the following year, The Wilmington Courant, which was soon discontinued for want of support. In 1763, he printed the second volume of the Laws of the government of New-Castle, Kent, Sussex, upon Delaware, in continuation of the volume printed by Franklin and Hall in Philadelphia, in 1752.

In Maryland, Jonas Green printed, at Annapolis, in 1756, Reverend Thomas Cradock's New version of the Psalms. James Bisset's Abridgment and Collection of the Acts of Assembly of Maryland, being printed by William Bradford in Philadelphia, in 1759.

In Virginia, William Hunter printed, in 1752, The Acts of Assembly, now in force, in Virginia; and, in 1754, The Journal of Major George Washington, now one of the rarest of American Colonial publications, which was reprinted in London in the same year with a map.

In North Carolina, James Davis established the first printing-press at Newbern, in 1751, printing in the same year, A Collection of all the public Acts of Assembly of North-Carolina; and, in December, 1754, printed the Message of Governor Arthur Dobbs, proposing a plan of union with all the British Colonies for mutual future defense. In 1755, he founded The North-Carolina Gazette, and continued its publication for about six years. In 1764, he founded the North-Carolina Magazine, or universal intelligencer, which was probably continued up to the revival of the first Gazette by him in 1768. In 1764, Andrew Steuart established a printing-press at Wilmington, styling himself, Printer to the King's most excellent Majesty, and began the publication of The North-Carolina Gazette and weekly post-boy, which was discontinued in about three years for want of support.

In South Carolina, Peter Timothy printed, in 1753, John Lining's Description of American yellow fever, the earliest account of this disease printed in America. In 1758, Robert Wells established a printing-press in Charleston and founded The South-Carolina and American general gazette, which was continued by him, and by his son, to the end of the year 1792.

In Georgia, the first printing-press was established, at Savannah, by James Johnston, in 1762; and, in the following year, he founded The Georgia Gazette, the only newspaper printed in Georgia until after the Revolutionary War.

Dr. Douglass died October 21, 1752, and this year is mentioned near the close of this volume. This title-page could not have been prefixed by the author. In 1753 this volume was issued with a new title-page, and, following the old sheets, pages 1-416 as here given, were twenty pages of new matter, 417-440, from Salmon's Geographical and historical grammar, printed in London 1757, "in order to render this book more complete." This peculiarity in publication is found in the 1753 edition of volume two, in the copy belonging to the Massachusetts Historical Society, and implies a later date of publication than the title indicates.

It was continued up to the time of Hunter's death in August 1761. After a brief suspension it was printed by his foreman, Joseph Royle, who married a sister, for the joint benefit of himself and Hunter's son William, until his death in 1765. Alexander Purdie then continued the publication of the Gazette for the benefit of Royle's widow, Hunter's son, and himself, until the marriage of the widow to John Dixon, when the publication was continued by the firm of Purdie &amp; Dixon to 1774. Dixon and his wife's son, William Hunter, continued the paper from 1775 to 1777, when it was again suspended for a time, its publication being renewed, in 1779, by John Dixon and Thomas Nicholson. 6819	BIBLIA, continued. seven or eight hundred copies for Daniel Henchman and other booksellers, of Boston; who stated that it was carried through the press as privately as possible, and bore the London imprint so as to prevent prosecution from those in England and Scotland who published the Bible by a patent from the Crown or cum privilegio as did the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. This statement has been the subject of much controversy. George Bancroft disputing its accuracy by declaring, in his History of the United States, that the Bible "was not printed here in English until the land became free." George Livermore, pointed to this statement as one of the inaccuracies of the History and defended the accuracy of Isaiah Thomas' statement. Bancroft throwing upon his critics the onus by stating that "Till a copy of the pretended American edition is produced, no credit can be given to the second-hand story." The statements of Isaiah Thomas upon matters concerning early American literature are entitled to the highest consideration, and should never be lightly set aside without positive evidence to the contrary; but it cannot be denied that his statements are usually founded on better evidence than mere hearsay. Writing a century ago, Thomas was unable to specify only a single copy which was said to have been at one time in the possession of John Hancock, and which at that time was merely a matter of hearsay. There are also other inherent weaknesses in the story as told. In 1902, at the sale of the McKee collection in New York, there was sold, it is said for a fabulous sum, a copy of a Bible, bearing the title and imprint as given above, for which the claim was made that it was the only known copy of the Bible surreptitiously printed by Kneeland and Green in 1752. This copy was purchased from George P. Philes, a bibliographer, and antiquarian dealer of note in New York, a good many years ago by Mr. McKee, and its possession has been a secret known only to its owner until this sale. The volume lacks the New Testament title—in itself a serious omission in support of its claim. Whatever critical examination of this singular issue may disclose, it can be authoritatively stated that the name of Mark Baskett does not appear upon any edition of the Bible printed in England before the year 1761, when it first appears, with differences from the imprint given above, which should be noted, as: "Printed by Mark Baskett, Printer to the King's most excellent Majesty, and the Assigns of R. Baskett," London 1761. If the believers in the story told by Isaiah Thomas accept the only conclusion open to them, in view of this fact, that from a not unnatural confusion of dates when given from memory the publication was later than 1752, then the whole fabric of names and date upon which the story is built disappears, and nothing tangible remains. In dealing with this supposed American publication two courses seemed open to the author of this work. One to ignore the claim of the Bible of 1752 entirely, by omitting all reference to it, as have O'Callaghan, and Wright. The other to make a definite statement, that no credible evidence exists of the printing of the Bible, as a whole, or of the New Testament, in the English language, in the American Colonies before the year 1777. The historian's position is unquestionably correct. The dishonest transaction cannot be laid at our door. The supposed American printed Bible of 1752 is a myth.	AUCTION VALUES

In May 1753, the printing office was removed to opposite the Old-Slip Market. In May 1754, it was again removed to Queen-Street, next door to Mr. Robert G. Livingston's between the Fly and Meal Markets, where, in October, was first displayed the Sign of the Bible and Crown, which continued to be the distinguishing mark of Gainé's printing-office until the close of the Revolutionary War, when the Crown was removed from the Bible. In May 1757, the printing-office was removed, permanently, to Hanover-Square, except for a brief period, from April to October 1763, when it was located in Rotten-Row, next door to that corner opposite the Merchants' Coffee House. In November, 1765, publication was temporarily suspended while the Stamp Act was in force. In February 1768, the name of the paper was altered to "The New-York Gazette and the weekly Mercury." From September 21, to November 2, 1776, the Gazette was printed by Gainé at Newark, in East-New-Jersey, but receiving insufficient support Gainé returned to New York and devoted his paper to the royalist cause. When peace was established the Gazette ceased publication 10 November 1783, after an existence of about thirty-one years under its founder.	AUCTION VALUES

	Boston, New-England: Printed and sold by D. Fowle, in Ann-Street facing the Town-Dock. 1753. pp. (4), 440. 8vo. MHS.
	This volume was issued shortly after the death of Dr. Douglass in 1752, with a title-page bearing date of 1751. "In order to render this work more compleat," twenty pages, 417-440, were added to the old sheets, from Salmon's Geographical and historical grammar, London, 1757, and it is a peculiarity to be noted that these additional pages are found in copies of volume two whose title-page bears the date of 1753, as given above, indicating a date of publication four or five years later.

Fowle's account of his trial and imprisonment, printed in the following year, forms an interesting chapter in the history of the liberty of the press in this country. Samuel Waterhouse is supposed to be the author, as it is known that he made use of the same pseudonym in 1760. It has also been attributed to Benjamin Church (1734-1776). In the copy in the possession of the Boston Athenæum is written in contemporary handwriting: "The supposed authors Benj Brandon of Boston &amp; Rev.<sup>d</sup> Dr Mayhew." [-December, 1755.] Boston: Printed by Benjamin Edes and John Gill, at their printing-office near the East end of the Town-House, in King Street. 1755. fol. This was the third newspaper to bear the title of "The Boston Gazette." Soon after it began, the publishers removed to Queen Street, where it was continuously published until the breaking out of the Revolutionary War in April, 1775, when Gill's interests ceased. From April to June 5th, publication was suspended. At the latter date Edes renewed the printing of the Gazette, at Water- town, and continued to print it there until November, 1776, when he returned to Boston, printing as before in Queen Street. His sons, Benjamin and Peter, were some time after concerned with him in printing the paper. In 1784, it was printed by Edes & Son, 42 Cornhill. It was afterwards printed in Marlborough Street; later in King, now State Street; and finally printed and published by Edes alone in Kilby Street, until it suspended pub- lication in 1798, forty-five years from its first publication.

Founded by a society whose avowed purpose was to counteract the influence of Christoph Saur among the Germans in Pennsylvania, of which the Reverend William Smith was the most active member; and edited by the Reverend Johann Friedrich Handshuh. It is said to have been issued twice a month, and Hildeburn, from the single number known, thinks it was begun in June, 1755. Its publication probably ceased with the number for December 31, 1757, which contained the German translation of an article which had previously appeared in the "Pennsylvania Gazette," written by William Moore, which was offensive to the Quaker majority in the Assembly. The fact of Dr. Smith having caused the insertion of the article was extorted from Armbrüster, and the Assembly, entirely ignoring the participation of the others concerned in its publication, ordered his arrest and imprisonment. The single number known to be extant is in the possession of the Pennsylvania Historical Society.	AUCTION VALUES

7726	THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE. CONTAINING [With] THE FRESHEST ADVICES, FOREIGN AND DOMESTICK. NUMB 1. FRIDAY, AUGUST, 1756. [Numb. 1. Thursday, October 7. [-December, 1756.] Portsmouth in New-Hampshire: Printed by Daniel Fowle, 1756. 4to. The first newspaper printed in New Hampshire. Founded by Daniel Fowle. The number issued in August was evidently a prospectus, as no other issue was printed until October 7th, from which date it is customary to consider it begun. The Gazette was printed by its founder to September, 1764. At that date his nephew, Robert Fowle, was admitted to partnership, and the paper was printed by Daniel and Robert Fowle until about 1775. Robert, who has been styled the "unworthy" nephew, about this time removed to Exeter, and printed, in opposition, A New-Hampshire Gazette, altering the title in a short time to The New-Hampshire Gazette. There appears to be evidence that the elder Fowle did not suspend publication, and that his paper was styled "The New-Hampshire Gazette and Historical Chronicle." On May 25, 1776, the title was altered to the "Freeman's Journal or New-Hampshire Gazette," and was so printed and published by Benjamin Dearborn to 1778. In that year the title was again altered to "The New-Hampshire Gazette, or State Journal and general advertiser" and continued by Daniel Fowle to 1784. In 1785, John Melcher and George Jerry Osborne, two of Fowle's apprentices, under the firm name of Melcher &amp; Osborne, printed the Gazette to 1786, in which year Osborne withdrew, and Melcher, Fowle's successor and heir, continued the publication till 1802, when the Gazette was sold to Nathaniel S. &amp; Washington Peirce, who published it for about three years, and, in 1805, sold it to William Weeks who continued it, with marked ability, to the close of 1813. He was succeeded in 1814 by the firm of Beck &amp; Foster, as publishers, who continued it until the death of Daniel C. Foster in 1823, his partner, Gideon Beck, continuing as publisher till 1834, when Albert Greenleaf was admitted to partnership, until Beck retired permanently in 1838. Since then, with numerous changes in owners, policy and fortunes, the Gazette, always bearing in some form in its title the original name given it by its founder, has been continuously published to the present time. And State and local pride will doubtless continue it to be the oldest newspaper continuously published in the United States.	AUCTION VALUES

[–December, 1758.] Newport: Printed and sold by James Franklin, at the Post Office near the Town School House. 1758. fol. With the exception of the New-Hampshire Gazette this is the oldest paper continuously published in the United States. James Franklin, who founded it, was a son of the James Franklin who printed the Rhode-Island Gazette, in 1732. Upon his death, 22 August, 1762, the Mercury was continued by his mother, Anne Franklin, until she formed a partnership with her son-in-law, Samuel Hall, under the firm name of Franklin and Hall, in Thames Street. By a curious coincidence, her husband's brother, Benjamin Franklin, having formed a partnership with David Hall, was at this time printing and publishing under the firm name of Franklin and Hall, also, in Philadelphia. On Mrs. Franklin's death, 19 April, 1763, Hall continued the Mercury to March, 1768, when it passed under the control of Solomon Southwick as proprietor. When the British troops entered Newport in 1776 Southwick, who was an outspoken and uncompromising patriot, buried his press and printing material, and went to Attleborough, Massachusetts, and there, it is said, published the Mercury. The British finding his press and material, used them to print the Newport Gazette, which was published by John Howe, who had been the partner of Margaret Draper in publishing the Boston News-letter up to the time of the evacuation of Boston by the British troops. No copies of of the Mercury from 1776 to 1780 are known. When publication was resumed in January 1780, it appeared under the management of Southwick &amp; Barber, up to 1787, when Southwick again became its sole proprietor. In 1795, Henry Barber, who had learned the trade of printing under Southwick, became the sole proprietor up to the time of his death 11 September, 1800. Beginning with the number for 16 December, 1800, the Mercury was continued to 19 August, 1809, by his widow, Ann Barber. At that date L. Rousmaniere and William Barber became the owners and publishers, until they were succeeded by William and John H. Barber, 22 November, 1817. On the 6th November, 1841, J. H. Barber became the sole proprietor, up to the 2 January, 1847, when his son was admitted to partnership under the firm name of J. H. Barber &amp; Son. The son, William Lee Barber, continued the Mercury until his death, 17 December, 1850, aged twenty-five years. The Mercury then passed out of the family which had published it almost continuously for seventy years. Since 1851 the Mercury has been continuously published, with comparatively few changes in ownership, to the present year.	AUCTION VALUES

8877	HARVARD COLLEGE, continued. The volume was the suggestion of Francis Bernard, the newly-arrived royal Governor, who desired that the example of the English Universities, in that respect, should be followed by Harvard College. To that end a competition was invited by a notice posted in the College Chapel on Saturday, March 14, 1761, of a "Proposal for a celebration of the death of the late King, and the accession of his present Majesty, by members of Harvard College." The competition was to be open to any undergraduate, or those who had taken a degree within seven years. Six guineas, in prizes of a guinea each, were offered to the authors of the best compositions of the following several kinds: 1. A Latin oration. 2. A Latin poem in hexameters. 3. A Latin elegy in hexameters and pentameters. 4. A Latin ode. 5. An English poem in long verse. 6. An English ode. Candidates could compete for more than one kind, but not with two compositions of the same kind. The anonymity of the candidates was to be strictly preserved, and this obtained in the final publication. And July 1st was made the limit of time in which compositions were to be sent to President Holyoke. Under these conditions, not, it appears, always fully complied with, the volume appeared, and in May, 1763, a specially bound copy was presented to King George the third, by the agent of the Province in London, but no expression of acknowledgment is known to have been made. The claim was made for the copy sold at the sale of the Odell Collection in 1878 that it was the presentation copy to King George III, but this is disproved by that copy being now in the George III Library which was transferred to the British Museum by his successor. A few copies were printed on thick paper for presentation to the royal family, of which the Brinley and Odell copies are examples. The question of the authorship of the several compositions has been an interesting subject of discussion, the consensus of opinion generally agreeing with the following, which is based upon names written in a copy formerly belonging to Stephen Sewall, himself one of the contestants. O. OCTOBER 20TH, [-December, 1762.] Providence, in New-England: Printed by William Goddard opposite the Court-House. 1762. fol. NYPL. RIHS. This is the first newspaper printed in the Providence Plantations. Founded by William Goddard, and continued by him to May 4, 1765. From May 11, to August 24, 1765, its publication was suspended. On the latter date it appeared as "A Providence Gazette Extraordinary," printed by S. and W. Goddard, and afterwards as Printed by Sarah Goddard and Company. In August, 1766, William Goddard announced his regret at being obliged to leave and engage in other fields of enterprise, and subsequently published newspapers successively in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, where he died in 1817. The Gazette then appeared with the imprint, Printed (in the absence of William Goddard) by Sarah Goddard and Company. In September, 1767, Sarah Goddard and John Carter became the publishers. In November, 1768, William and Sarah Goddard resigned their rights to John Carter, who continuously published the Gazette, with William Wilkinson as partner from November, 1793, to May, 1799, to the year 1814. In February, 1814, Hugh H. Brown and William H. Wilson succeeded Carter as printers to the State and publishers of the Gazette until the retirement of Wilson in June, 1816, when Hugh H. Brown became its sole publisher. With the close of the year 1819, the first series of the Gazette as a weekly ended; and beginning with the number for January 3, 1820, a new series, as a semi-weekly, was begun with Hugh H. Brown and Walter R. Danforth, Carter's son-in-law, as publishers. On October 8, 1825, appeared the last issue of the Gazette, with H. H. Brown, publisher and proprietor, and Albert Gorton Greene as editor. On October 11, 1825, the Gazette was united with, if not actually absorbed by, the Rhode Island American, the first number appearing on that date as the "Rhode Island American and Providence Gazette," published by Carlisle &amp; Brown, which was continued to the close of the year 1832. The Rhode Island Historical Society possesses a nearly complete file of the Gazette. In December, 1762, the printing-office was removed to Second Street, between Race and Vine streets. With the number for October 31, 1765, called "Ein Abschieds Geschenk," the paper was discontinued during the period of the Stamp Act, and publication resumed November 18, 1765. In January, 1768, the title was altered to Der Wöchentliche Pennsylvanische Staatsbote, and in March, 1775, to Henrich Miller's Pennsylvanische Staatsbote, and its publication made bi-weekly on a half-sheet until July 26, 1776. July 9th a double sheet was issued with the full text of the Declaration of Independence printed in large, conspicuous type. With the approach of the British Army to Philadelphia, on September 17, 1777, publication was discontinued. The press and type were seized and taken to New York. After the evacuation of Philadelphia Miller returned and, finding assistance, resumed on August 5, 1778, the publication of the Staatsbote, at first on a half sheet, but after a few weeks in full size. On the 26th of May, 1779, Miller, then 80 years of age, took formal leave of his readers, and the publication of the Staatsbote ceased with that date.
